Chris Christie, azcentral.com gov. Doug Ducey appointed Roberto Brosaid as the new ceo of Arizona State Parks & Trails.In November, Ducey fired Parks director Sue Black and her top deputy, ending her tumultuous 31/2-year run of the agency. Black was fired after an investigation into the Arizona Republic uncovered allegations by former department archaeologists that the agency had developed state land without complying with laws protecting American native and other archaeological sites. The charges sparked a criminal investigation from the Arizona Attorney General's Office. Black has also been repeatedly accused of misbehaving employees, including serving as a woman with cancer. Meanwhile, interim Director of Parks Ted Vogt was appointed on Friday to lead the state Department of Gaming. They're going to pay him $135,000 a year. MORE: The governor fired Parks Director Sue Black after inquiries by The Republic's directorial experience Broscheid comes from Colorado, where he has been director and CEO of Colorado Parks & Wildlife since 2013. They're going to pay him $170,000 a year. In Colorado, Broscheid led efforts to expand access to colorado state parks, setting up programs to connect young and underserved residents and their families with outdoor and recreation opportunities, Ducey's office said. Before working in Colorado, He spent 18 years in the Arizona Department of Games and Fish, including the agency's deputy director from 2008 to 2013, according to Ducey's office. I am delighted to be back in Arizona and work to protect our natural parks and promote our recreational assets, Ducey said in a statement. Arizona offers the most spectacular state parks anywhere in the country. Bob is well trained to lead the preservation of these natural wonders for the benefit of Arizonans and future generations. Broscheid said he was honored to be joining Arizona Parks & Trails. Arizona is full of diverse landscapes, rich cultural history and opportunities for outdoor recreation. These parks belong to everyone, and my priorities will be to help preserve and protect these natural resources for the enjoyment of all visitors, he said. Broscheid holds a bachelor's degree in wildlife management from Arizona State University and is a graduate of the National Conservation Institute. The interim head appointed as director of gambling Vogt meanwhile has extensive state government experience as he became director of gambling. Vogt was Ducey's first chief of operations, director of veterans affairs and executive director of the Arizona Corporation Commission. Ted is a proven leader and has the experience and knowledge needed to build a strong and successful team, Ducey said in a statement. Ted is highly respected throughout the state government for his professionalism, and I'm proud to appoint him as the next director of the Arizona Department of Gambling. Vogt said he was honored and excited about his new role. To the craig.harris@arizonarepublic.com or 602-444-8478READ MORE:For more stories that are relevant, subscribe to azcentral.com. Under Bob's leadership, Colorado has prepared the first comprehensive and broad-designed Statewide Comprehensive Outdoor Recreation Plan for continued outdoor recreation and the preservation of natural resources into the future. Bob also led efforts to expand access to Colorado state parks, establish programs to connect young and underserved residents and their families with outdoor and recreational facilities. With Bob's extensive leadership background in the wild and outdoor management, I am delighted that he will return to Arizona and work to protect our natural parks and promote our recreational resources, Governor Ducey said. I look forward to providing real oversight of the gaming industry from day one to service and improving services for the citizens of Arizona. PAGE 3 PHOENIX - Governor Doug Ducey delivered a state address today urging state leaders to put party labels aside and do things that matter - securing our water's future, expanding economic opportunities, protecting students, investing in public education with a focus on outcomes, resources and reforms, preparing Arizona for future moderation and protecting public safety. See the full transcript of the comments below. See the full transcript of the comments in Spanish HERE. Below are some of the highlights from the governor's speech. State of the our country is strong, and it's getting stronger. The challenge ahead is to set the ground today to make sure Arizona stays strong tomorrow. This requires action to do things that are important and secure Arizona's future. The issues we need to resolve are not partisan. In some cases, they are not political at all. Providing Arizona's water future: It's time to protect Lake Mead and Arizona. It's time to ratify the plan for the a.I.M., and we have 17 days to do that. This will require a compromise. No stakeholders will get Want. Everybody's going to have to give. And I'm impressed with the willingness of those involved to do just that. Abolition of legislative immunity:And what if we started with the abolition of the most unnecessary law of all: legislative immunity.... Send T.J. Shope to the ballot and let the people talk about special privileges for elected officials. I called arizonans in my office last spring. Parents. Teachers. Principals. Law enforcement. Prosecutors. Mental health professionals. Democrats and Republicans. People who weren't Democrats or Republicans. The students themselves. With the aim of being proactive and taking action to prevent the tragedy from happening here. We investigated the five deadliest school shootings in the last 20 years and asked ourselves: How could we prevent them? We've built a plan that could make a real difference: a Safe Arizona School Plan. More cops on campus. More school counselors. Improved background checks. The STOP command, which protects Second Amendment rights while keeping weapons out of the hands of individuals who are a deadly threat. These are solutions that will make schools safer and it is time to do so. I will include in my budget some elements of this plan that you will see on Friday -- with an even greater investment than I proposed last year. Security and meeting a raise for teachers:And that was only eight months ago, we delivered a 20% pay rise to our good teachers.... Half of that commitment was added last fall, and some school leaders are even further. ... And anyone who thinks about using these resources somewhere else has one message - don't even think about it. These are the upbringings that teachers have earned, and that's a raise that we're going to deliver and protect. And more is needed for K-12 education. Emphasis on results, resources and reforms. Expansion of the Academy of Teachers in Arizona: Four years ago, I heard what sounded like a really good idea to address teacher shortages. If someone graduates from a university in Arizona, is willing to stay in Arizona and teach in public school, why don't you let them graduate debt-free by providing a scholarship? We turned it into reality and started with the Arizona Academy of Teachers. Already 221 students have started to move through the program. We plan to expand it significantly this year. more dollars, more support. We're going to create a talent pipeline and the next generation of teachers in Arizona. Our education leaders create 21st-century courses called career and technical education. Today, students in these programs are trained to become nurses, pilots, pharmacists, bankers, firefighters and software developers -- all before graduation.... These are the programmes that we intend to build, expand and align with the jobs of tomorrow. And my budget will do just that. Identifying professional licenses for new residents: If people want to work. Operating! 100,000 people are moving here this year. There is work available for each of them. Many are trained and certified in other countries. In Arizona, they make a living with their own licensing committees and their cronies, who say, You can't work here. You didn't pay for the piper. Let's stop this nonsense. Pass the law to Warren Petersen to grant universal recognition for all professional licenses and let them work. I support Arizona's Second Chance Centers: Last fall I visited our state prison in Buckeye, Arizona. ... At the jobs fair, the men and women who will soon be released were looking forward to participating in a programme that equips them with skills to successfully re-enter society. In a row were employers such as Jacksons Car Wash and Hickman's Family Farms -- some left with multiple job offers. This is a program that we need to provide in the 21st century to protect public safety and reduce Arizona's prison population. Strengthening economic ties with Mexico: Arizona's economy is in dissuad. There's no doubt about that. We have added almost 300,000 new jobs in the last four years. And I'm proud to say that our relationship with Mexico is stronger than ever. With the updated North American trade deal known as the USMCA, it will mean even more trade coming through our ports and more jobs for Arizonans.Taking ownership again of the Capitol Building:And breaking news: someone calls the Daily Show -- we even own this building again. Promoting the Rainy Day Fund:So, the balanced budget I will present to you on Friday fully funds the priorities that we know are important -- public safety, child safety, education -- above and above inflation. Some targeted investments are in critical areas. But frankly, for a superannu about year, this budget is pretty easy to read. Because I propose that we secure Arizona's future and prepare responsibly for the unexpected and the inevitable -- by bringing our rainy day fund to a record balance of a billion dollars. The governor's comments - Chief Justice Bales, Members of the Legislative Council, the Judiciary and fellow Arizonans - I am so honoured to be back here today and, like you, I am ready for work.2018 has brought us many ways. Election years do it for the people in our business. Elections also bring change and new faces, as we see here today - and in government, that is a really good thing. Let us work together in the months that await us to our promises into progress for the country we all love. Congratulations and welcome to all those who took the oath for the first time and the other civil servants who took the oath of allegiance to me last week. It wasn't that long ago that I was new here too. I ran away because I didn't care, I believed I could make a difference, and I felt we needed some fresh ideas. No doubt, you're all here for many of the same reasons. You're lucky enough to have some real pros here to show you the ropes. Bowers and President Fann -- you are well suited and well for these new roles. I hope today isn't the last day that you're going to have my back. Leaders Fernandez and Bradley -- I look forward to working together. I think we can all agree that there are many opportunities to find common. Bipartisanship is a word that is mixed up a lot. And today, everyone seems to have their own definition. Let me be clear about the approach that I intend to take. I'm not just here to work with Republicans on Republican ideas. And bipartisanship doesn't just mean working with Democrats on Democratic ideas. I'm here as governor of all people to work with all of you on good ideas. And now it's time. Because the state of our country is strong and it's getting stronger. The challenge ahead is to set the ground today to make sure Arizona stays strong tomorrow. This requires action to do things that are important and secure Arizona's future. The issues we need to resolve are not partisan. In some cases, they are not political at all. At the top of this list: securing our water future. Stay with me -- this is not the issue that leads the news. That's not to say it's for a snappy title, or a provocative soundbite, and it can't be explained in 280 characters. But when I traveled around the country this year, that's one of the questions I've been asked about by the most real people -- especially Arizona. To rural Arizona. To is an issue that deserves your focus and attention. That's why he's first on my list. Here's the point: We're in a 19-year drought. It's going to get worse before it gets better. Arizona and our neighboring states are pumping more water from the Colorado River as Mother Nature returns. It's time to protect Lake Mead and Arizona. It's time to ratify the plan for the a.I.M., and we have 17 days to do that. This will require a compromise. No one's going to get everything they want. Everybody's going to have to give. And I'm impressed with the willingness of those involved to do just that. It was said: which is for drinking. Water is for battle. Today we have two leaders who have scars to prove it. There are giants who deserve the credit that Arizona has gotten to this point - not to mention our gratitude for their lifetime of public service: Governor Bruce Babbitt and Senator Jon Kyl.Bruce Babbitt served 20 years in public office, first as Arizona attorney general and governor and later as secretary of the Interior under President Bill Clinton.Jon Kyle served Arizona in Congress for 26 years including three terms as U.S. senator. When Arizona needed him most, he returned to the Senate in September last year. Governor Babbitt and Senator Kyle have shown us the way. I work with other people. I'm putting aside the differences. Putting our country, and the greater the good in the first place. Now it's our turn to do a hard lifting. This issue is important and urgent. Our economy. Our environment. Our future. Let's show that we can work together in a bipartisan way and get it done. The same applies to many things, frankly. We implemented the employment freeze and withheld a line that had taken control of the government. Today, our state government is working more efficiently. We have pulled the government out of the way of creating jobs, cutting red tape and putting a moratorium on new regulations. In fact, we have abolished more than 1000 regulations. Imagine if we were to adopt the same approach on the law in this legislative session. There is no shortage of laws in our country. Over 107 years, we have built a heart-in by 1,000-plus pages. A lot of our laws have merit. A lot of people don't. Why does each legislative session seem to be competition to pass the most new laws? What if we could find a way to get rid of the old unnecessary laws instead of just creating new ones? If we repealed three for every law we passed, or if the new laws had sunsets. I challenge this law to chop the piles and piles of statutes down, make the laws meaningful and important to Arizona today. And what if we started by abolishing the most unnecessary law of all: legislative immunity. We are a nation of laws, not people. No one, not me, not you, is above the law. Congress likes to exempt themselves from the law, but doesn't that make americans disdain them? Let's show the people of Arizona that their elected leaders will live by the same laws as every man and woman in this country. Send T.J. Shope to the ballot and let the people talk about special privileges for elected officials. And when there are emerging issues that need to be addressed, let's not ignore them -- let's solve them. A year ago, most of us didn't know Parkland in Florida, nor did we exist. But now, tragically, there's another one on the list. In our memories and american vernacular. Columbine. Sandy convened Hook.So Arizonans in his office last spring, Parents. Teachers. Principals. Law enforcement. Prosecutors. Mental health professionals. Democrats and Republicans. People who weren't Democrats or Republicans. The students themselves. With the aim of being proactive and taking action to prevent the tragedy from happening here. We investigated the five deadliest school shootings in the last 20 years and asked ourselves: How could we prevent them? We've built a plan that could make a real difference: a Safe Arizona School Plan. More cops on campus. More school counselors. Improved background checks. The STOP command, which protects Second Amendment rights while keeping weapons out of the hands of individuals who are a deadly threat. These are solutions that will make schools safer and it is time to do so. I will include in my budget some elements of this plan that you will see on Friday -- with an even greater investment than I proposed last year. We know the police are safer. Who do we call when there's trouble? Our brave men and women in blue. And that's why we're going to include enough dollars to put a cop on every campus he needs. And I'm going to with legislative leaders to accept the rest. This plan is a grounded and balanced approach. That's why leaders like David French, at the national review and Hugh Hewitt, supported him; why it is supported by the Arizona PTA, and why we model the elements from the Gabby Giffords plan. This is simply too important an issue to leave partisan politics and special interests to decide. We have less bureaucracy, more efficiency. And there's still more to be done. Remember when Andy Tobin got out of work? Well, pin your belts, because there's going to be a lot more of it when we're looking to save taxpayers dollars and streamline state government. And our dedicated civil servants will continue to play a critical role in shaping our pace. We will look at their expertise as we use customer service technology and techniques to further strengthen our government. This is another non-partisan matter. This is not a Republican versus Democrat. In our nation's capitol, both parties are equally to blame for inflated government, spending and ineligible debt. If anything, Arizona vs. Washington, D.C. is a question. The federal government is broke and broken, and has been for decades. Washington could learn a lot from us. When the federal government failed to secure the border, we created a border strike unit and fought crime without disrupting trade. We know the value of time, so we have reduced waiting times at the MVD.Our child safety department has become a national model and the engagement of other countries. And yes, when Congress failed to do its job, we kept the Grand Canyon gate open. I've spent a lot of time over the last four years to make a lot of new friends. I've been to every county. Dozens of schools. In our state agencies. Companies -- big and small. It was fun and delicious. Chocolate biscuits at Beyond Bread in Tucson. Especially at Lute's Casino in Yuma. You have to try the pies at Mogollon Moose in Payson. Let's just say you don't have to guess my New Year's resolution. We have great people in this country. Some have been here for generations, others came yesterday. And then there are those of us who said goodbye last year. Their memory and their legacy will live on. Congressman Ed PastorSuperintendent public instruction Carolyn WarnerTreasurer Carol SpringerChief Justice Bud JonesSenator John McCainOthers had names that we were not aware of - their lives cut short on duty. We salute you. We're proud of you. And we thank you. We know we can't do it without you to truly secure Arizona's future. And we've got to continue to support and invest in you and your families. Ladies and gentlemen of the legislation, we have work to do for us. But with the leadership here, and the passion and purpose that we bring to the issues that we face, I have great hope and great enthusiasm that this will be our most productive issue to date. Let's leave the party stickers aside. Let's put Arizona first. Let's do things that matter. Let's get to work. Thank you and God bless ##E# blessed ###
